

Green light for new P-TECH schools

The Federal Government recently announced it would support the foundation of a further 12 Pathways in Technology (P-TECH) schools across Australia. The Skilling Australia Foundation has been contracted by the government to establish the new pilot sites, located in NSW, Western Australia, South Australia, Queensland and Tasmania. At P-TECH, students undertake an advanced STEM learning program with support from the school's industry partners. The programs match each student with an industry mentor and provide opportunities for them to connect their learning to real-life applications.
